QUADRUS Plan Libre adopts EIZO

Beirut, Lebanon

A Stylish Yet Functional Tool for Architects

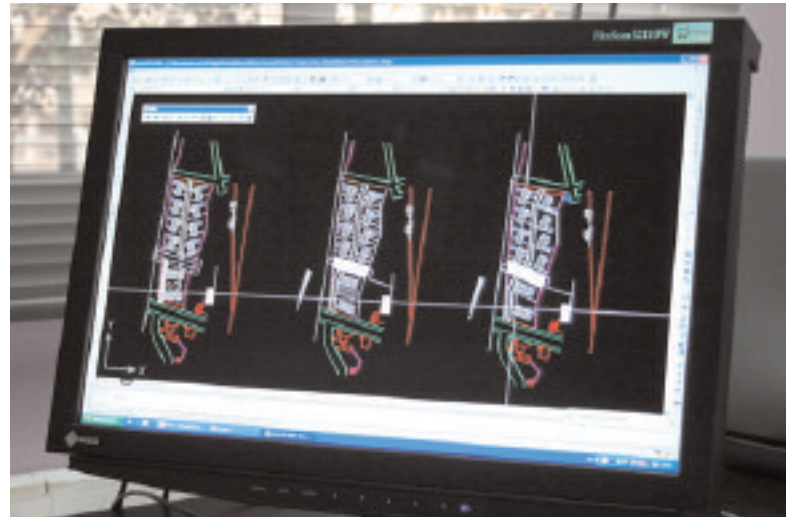

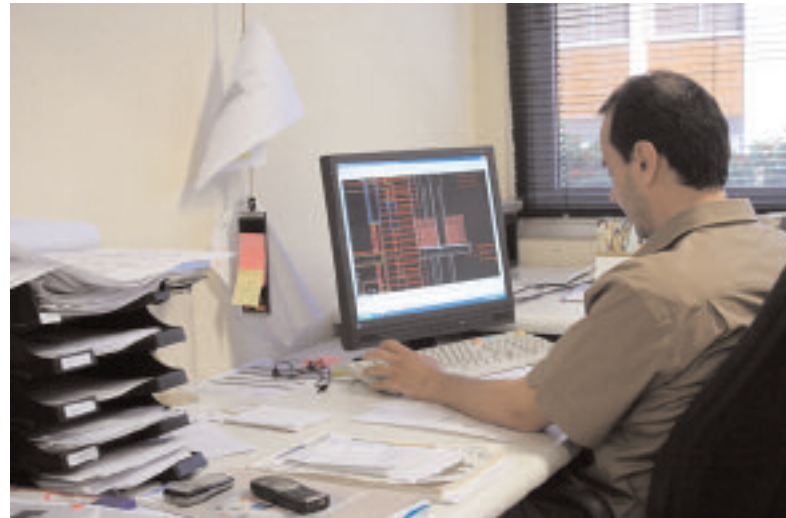

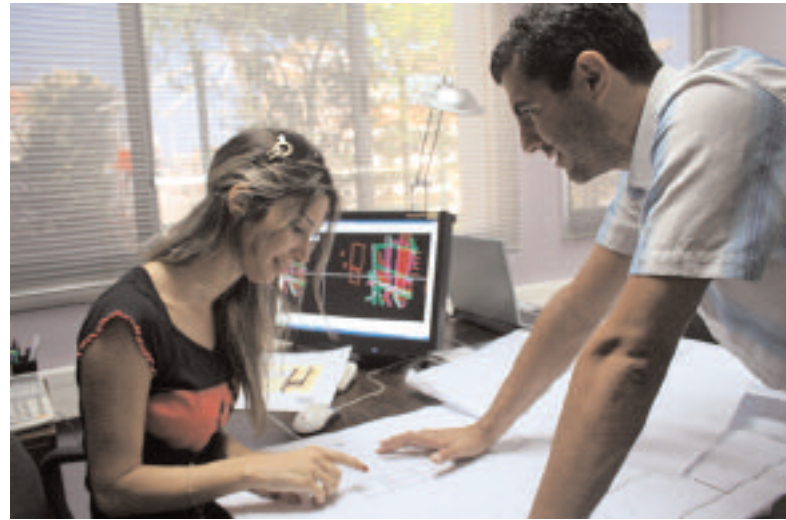

“It’s like the Rolce Royce of monitors,” says Dany Hage, a QUADRUS Plan Libre Consultants Architect in Lebanon.

Hage uses the Eizo SlimEdge FlexScan monitor, which by style is a great shift compared to the old bulky, conventional look of the CRT screen he previously used. “The architecture of this screen is complete and has a good shape and structure,” he explains. Eizo’s particular flair blends in nicely with their modern offices.

Among architects, interior designers and landscape designers, Hage points out that his Eizo monitor has become a functional instrument during client meetings, which are regularly conducted right around his desk. The monitor’s practical multi-directional rotation makes it easy for everyone to get a clear view of the designs displayed on the screen.

When working individually, Hage especially points out that he likes how he can simultaneously work on multiple windows with his Eizo.

Hage particularly praises Eizo for giving him a high level of comfort needed in his profession. Since he spends most of his time behind the screen when in the office and the mobility of the screen allows him to see his design in all different angles so he could assess, fix and complete his work flawlessly.

Style, effectiveness and convenience truly distinguish Eizo from the rest. Its unparalleled ease and comfort provides users with a feeling of contentment and accomplishment.

As an architect, Hage expects efficiency and Eizo delivers. Eizo's slim-edged monitor hardly takes up space on his desk, and the working space on the monitor very closely resembles an architect's conventional drafting table.

QUADRUS Plan Libre's clients range from small businesses and individuals to large corporations and governmental agencies.
